Exploring the Change Process

Systems-Centered Training

The Systems-Centered approach is an innovative method of change pioneered by Yvonne Agazarian. Systems-Centered Training (SCT) begins with the idea that we are always in a system, whether it is the system of ourselves as a person, a marriage or friendship, a family, a work group or team, or even the whole of an organization or company. SCT then works from the assumption that the systems in which we take part govern how we function within them. The ongoing work then for all of us is how to take up our member role in each of our systems so that we contribute to building the kind of systems we want to influence us.

SCT also recognizes that one of the biggest challenges for any living human system is that our nervous system easily activates to differences as a threat. This human reactivity then fuels attempts to convert, do away with or scapegoat differences. SCT introduces the method of functional subgrouping that enables living human systems to shift away from reactivity and instead explore differences as resources. SCT sees this ongoing process of discriminating and integrating differences as the essential process in development and change.

SCT also works to weaken the restraining forces of defensive patterns so that the driving forces inherent in human systems are free to move toward the goals of change and common sense problem-solving. SCT teaches change strategies that apply to all living human systems: individuals, groups, couples, organizations, and businesses.

In systems-centered therapy, members learn functional subgrouping to contain and integrate differences. Also important is the “fork-in-the-road” technique that enables choosing whether to explore the impact of one’s defense or the experience being defended against. Defenses are systematically reduced in a sequence. The sequence addresses the most common symptoms that people come to therapy to manage: anxiety, tension, somatic symptoms, depression, hostile acting out, and interpersonal issues around separation and individuation. As these symptoms are reduced, the patient, couple, family, or group is freed to solve the problems inherent in each phase of development and to use common sense in managing life problems.

In organizations, systems-centered consultants develop the work system by influencing communications at all system levels, clarifying goals and the paths to the goals, and connecting work energy to goals. Rather than the Sisyphus approach which tries to drive a system to change, SCT weakens the phase-specific restraining forces, freeing the system to develop and transform and use its resources to do its work. Work groups learn SCT methods for integrating differences rather than trying to convert or scapegoat differences. When used as information, differences become resources for developing more complex, diverse organizations that can better manage change and continue to innovate.

SCTRI is a non-profit organization established in 1995 that supports training and research in the systems-centered approach. We are an international association of over 200 members from around the world and most of what we do is done by action groups of volunteer members. Our members range from therapists, organizational consultants, pastoral educators, managers, teachers, administrators to curious people.

Overview of SCT Conference 2011

We are pleased and excited to invite you to participate in the 12th Annual International SCT Conference in Atlanta, Georgia. Our conference highlights the leading edges in systems-centered thinking and its broad range of applications. This year’s theme, “Exploring the Change Process,” bridges both the theoretical and the practical in exploring how to develop systems-centered systems. The systems-centered approach builds the system that enables the people and the system to develop and transform. The offerings range from theory to hands-on techniques, with choices for those wanting tools to apply in their work settings, and/or in-depth training in theory and practice.

Conference 2011 provides training that can be applied across diverse settings such as individual or group psychotherapy, organizational consultation, team building, pastoral education, educational systems or simply in one’s own personal life. Our workshops and training programs offer learning opportunities with energized and supportive professional colleagues. Whether you are attending an SCT conference for the first time or the twelfth time, our program is designed to provide useful, fresh and fun experiences to help you discover new pathways towards influencing and building the systems in which we live, work and play.

Pre-Conference Institute: The weekend institute provides an intensive training experience and an excellent introduction to systems-centered training. The institute offers attendees an opportunity to learn about themselves, systems, and groups in the unique environment built through SCT techniques. There is a variety of choices according to level of experience and area(s) of interest. Information regarding specific institutes offered this year is available on the website at www.systemscentered.com.

The Five-Day Conference:

Large Group Practicum: This 90-minute conference-as-a-whole practicum starts the conference on Sunday evening and ends it on Friday afternoon. Meeting at the end of each day (except Wednesday), the large group explores the conference experience using functional subgrouping.

Morning Training Sessions: The early morning program includes training groups at the Foundation, Intermediate and Advanced levels that meet each morning, Monday through Friday. The late morning program includes the popular Drop-In Groups that are open to anyone (90-minute sessions that focus on theory or a particular skill). Intermediate and advanced members can participate in groups focusing on leadership training, skills training, container training or consultation.

Afternoon Workshops: These two-hour workshops are open to all training levels and focus on applying systems-centered theory and methods in various contexts. In addition to your usual opportunity to sample workshops that look interesting, you can “specialize” by choosing to follow an organizational development, clinical, research, education, SAVI, theory & basics, or general track. The training tracks are specified in the program schedule.

Special Events: The Monday Night Dinner is an SCT conference tradition that offers attendees time to socialize, make new friends, and reconnect with old ones. A Silent Auction will be held during the conference with proceeds going to the Yvonne Agazarian Research Scholar Fund. A Thursday Night Party at the host hotel, sponsored by SCTRI, will offer food, fun, a cash bar, music by DJ Steve Weinstein, and dancing.

Who Should Attend? Professionals and students in the fields of mental health, organizational development, education, personal and professional coaching, and pastoral education as well as those curious about how a systemic approach can positively influence areas of one’s personal and professional life.

Looking forward to seeing you there!

Dave Schwing, Mark Johnson, and Sven-Erik Viskari
Co-Directors for Conference 2011

Pre-Conference Weekend Institute

Saturday and Sunday, March 26 and 27, 2011 • 9:00 am to 5:30 pm

Registration: Friday Evening 6:30 – 8:30 (cash bar) • Saturday Morning 8:00 – 8:30

Welcome & Overview to Institute: Saturday Morning 8:30 – 8:45

#100-I Foundation Training: Explore SCT from the Inside Out: Sample Theory and Experience Putting SCT into Practice

Susan Cassano, Ph.D., CGP

Jon McCormick, Ph.D., CGP

Want to discover the experience of SCT? Join us in this two-day intensive workshop as we travel through the first phases of group development. You will learn the SCT methods for moving into the present moment, undoing anxiety, and learning how to connect with yourself and others authentically. In this experiential practicum, members learn to use functional subgrouping and undo defenses to using your common sense to solve problems of everyday life. Intermediate and Advanced level members will be working in this group as part of their #402 Container training.

#102-I Making a Map of Communication - SAVI: Tracking the Patterns that Matter

Claudia Byram, Ph.D., CGP

Sometimes the more we talk, the worse things get! Using the SAVI map (System for Analyzing Verbal Interactions), we will diagnose common communication binds and undo repetitive communication loops in the support of authentic, noise-free communication in organizations, therapy and everyday life. By “thinking” SAVI we can identify the behaviors that open or close our boundaries to new information. This is core training for Foundation and Intermediate members.

#103-I Contemplative Group Dynamics: Awakening Mind and Functional Subgrouping

Lawrence J. Ladden, Ph.D.

Through talks and contemplative instruction we will take a novel lens to functional subgrouping to see how the release from self-centered attention discloses the nature of experience or mind as transient and contextually determined. In this way we deepen our compassionate apprehension of the interdependence of self, other and lived-world.

#104-I Muscular Intelligence: Centering, Containment and Regulation of Arousal

Merete Holm Brantbjerg

Participants will be guided through a series of psychomotor exercises – introducing the method “resource-oriented skill training” – or “Motoric Haiku.” The exercises are simple to utilize and can support SCT students and practitioners to enhance their ability to develop and maintain centeredness, grounding, containment and regulation of high arousal states.

#105-I “Red Flag” Communication: Exploring, Intervening and Changing at Each System Level

Frances B. Carter, MSS, LSW, CGP

Participants will work together to identify and map out some of the common “red flag” communication patterns in oneself, in partnerships, teams or organizations that slow down or inhibit the flow of information necessary for development and think through strategies for intervention and change.

#301-IC Intermediate Skills Training

Dorothy Gibbons, LCSW

Erika Ekedal, MSc. Psych

This training is an intensive skill training that is designed to shift focus from work with oneself to work with others. This training introduces the SCT protocols with an emphasis on the theoretical context within which the protocol is used, the actual steps in each technical skill that make up the protocol, video taped practice of each skill and review of each video taped section with an eye on building the skill of force field development. By application to Dorothy Gibbons (dorothygibbons2@yahoo.com) or Erika Ekedal (erika.ekedal@humannature.se). Continues Mon.-Fri., 8:00-noon.

#402-I Container Training

Joy Luther, MSSW, LCSW

This training is an intermediate step in SCT training between subgrouping in the SCT member role and taking up a role to build the Group-as-a-Whole. It takes place within the context of the weekend Foundation Training group. This gives containers an opportunity to work within a new system as it develops and to practice their skills within a “nesting” of three subsystems – the leader of the Foundation Group system, the Container system, and the member of the Foundation Group system. See website for more information. By application to Joy Luther (JoyLuthersoffice@gmail.com).

#501-IC Licensing Group VI

Consultants: Yvonne Agazarian, Ed.D., CGP, DFAGPA, FAPA

Susan P. Gantt, Ph.D., CGP, ABPP, FAGPA, FAPA

The Licensing Group develops itself as a work group to do the work of assessing its members and making recommendations for who meets qualifications as a licensed SCT practitioner. This includes determining the criteria for assessing its members, its process for assessing work samples, and implementing its assessment process and making recommendations to the licensed members group. This group is closed. Continues Mon.-Fri., 8:30-noon.

#502-IC Advanced Training for Trainers

Rich Armington, LCSW

This training is for SCT trainers or those interested in becoming one for OD or therapy. This training observes the Licensing Task Group and then meets to track group dynamics, phase of system development, communication patterns that support the phase, leadership interventions to member, subgroup and group-as-a-whole, while linking interventions to theory and group functioning. This group is closed. Continues Mon.-Fri., 8:30-noon.
