Emotional Intelligence for Real World Solutions: Methods for Change in Clinical, Educational and Organizational Contexts

Systems-Centered Training

The Systems-Centered approach is an innovative method of change pioneered by Yvonne Agazarian. Systems-Centered Training (SCT) begins with the idea that we are always in a system, whether it is the system of ourselves as a person, a marriage or friendship, a family, a work group or team, or even the whole of an organization or company. SCT then works from the assumption that the systems in which we take part govern how we function within them. The ongoing work then for all of us is how to take up our member role in each of our systems so that we contribute to building the kind of systems we want to influence us.

SCT also recognizes that one of the biggest challenges for any living human system is that our nervous system easily activates to differences as a threat. This human reactivity then fuels attempts to convert, do away with or scapegoat differences. SCT introduces the method of functional subgrouping that enables living human systems to shift away from reactivity and instead explore differences as resources. SCT sees this ongoing process of discriminating and integrating differences as the essential process in development and change. SCT also works to weaken the restraining forces of defensive patterns so that the driving forces inherent in human systems are free to move toward the goals of change and common sense problem-solving. SCT teaches change strategies that apply to all living human systems: individuals, groups, couples, organizations, and businesses.

In systems-centered therapy, members learn functional subgrouping to contain and integrate differences. Also important is the "fork-in-the-road" technique that enables choosing whether to explore the impact of one's defense or the experience being defended against. Defenses are systematically reduced in a sequence. The sequence addresses the most common symptoms that people come to therapy to manage: anxiety, tension, somatic symptoms, depression, hostile acting out, and interpersonal issues around separation and individuation. As these symptoms are reduced, the patient, couple, family, or group is freed to solve the problems inherent in each phase of development and to use common sense in managing life problems.

In organizations, systems-centered consultants develop the work system by influencing communications at all system levels, clarifying goals and the paths to the goals, and connecting work energy to goals. Rather than the Sisyphus approach which tries to drive a system to change, SCT weakens the phase-specific restraining forces, freeing the system to develop and transform and use its resources to do its work. Work groups learn SCT methods for integrating differences rather than trying to convert or scapegoat differences. When used as information, differences become resources for developing more complex, diverse organizations that can better manage change and continue to innovate.

SCTRI is a non-profit organization established in 1995 that supports training and research in the systems-centered approach. We are an international association of over 200 members from around the world and most of what we do is done by action groups of volunteer members. Our members range from therapists, organizational consultants, pastoral educators, managers, teachers, and administrators to curious people.

Overview of SCT Conference 2012

We are delighted to invite you to participate in the 13th Annual International SCT Conference in San Francisco, California. Our Conference will give you an opportunity to learn and explore the leading edges and applications in systems-centered thinking and its broad range of contexts. This year's theme, Emotional Intelligence for Real World Solutions: Methods for Change in Clinical, Educational and Organizational Contexts, bridges both the theoretical and the practical in exploring how to develop systems-centered systems. The offerings range from theory to hands-on techniques, with choices for those wanting tools to apply in their work settings, and/or in-depth training in theory and practice. We are particularly excited about the range of workshops highlighting applications of SCT in clinical practice, pastoral counseling, education, organizational development, mind-body therapy, SAVI and interpersonal neurobiology.

In addition to foundation and intermediate level training opportunities, the Conference offers an increased range of advanced training tracks with the goal of providing a worthwhile professional and personal experience. This year's program offers a particular focus on the rich variety of experience of those developing and applying SCT theory and methods in a wide range of contexts and in making links with other models of change.

Feedback from previous attendees consistently emphasizes that taking part in the Annual Conference is more than just participating in training and workshops - to be part of a system for a whole week that is a living application of the theory and methods gives an extra dimension to this training and learning opportunity.

Whether you are attending an SCT conference for the first time or the 13th time, our program is designed to provide useful, rich and enjoyable experiences to help you discover new pathways towards influencing and building the systems in which we live, work and play.

Pre-Conference Institute: The weekend institute provides an intensive training experience and an excellent introduction to systems-centered training. The institute offers attendees an opportunity to learn about themselves, systems, and groups in the unique environment built through SCT techniques. There is a variety of choices according to level of experience and area of interest. Information regarding specific institutes offered this year is available on the website at www.systemscentered.com.

The Five-Day Conference:

Large Group Practicum: This 90-minute conference-as-a-whole practicum starts the conference on Sunday evening and ends it on Friday afternoon. Meeting at the end of each day (except Wednesday), the large group explores the conference experience using functional subgrouping.

Morning Training Sessions: The early morning program includes training groups at the Foundation, Intermediate and Advanced levels that meet each morning, Monday through Friday. The late morning program includes the popular Drop-In Groups that are open to anyone (90-minute sessions that focus on theory or a particular skill). Intermediate and advanced members can participate in groups focusing on leadership training, skills training, container training or consultation.

Afternoon Workshops: These two-hour workshops are open to all training levels and focus on applying systems-centered theory and methods in various contexts. In addition to your usual opportunity to sample workshops that look interesting, you can "specialize" by choosing to follow an organizational development, clinical, research, education, SAVI, theory & basics, or general track. The training tracks are specified in the program schedule.

Who Should Attend? Professionals and students in the fields of mental health, organizational development, education, personal and professional coaching, and pastoral education as well as those curious about how a systemic approach can positively influence areas of one's personal and professional life.

Looking forward to seeing you there!

Sven-Erik Viskari and Ray Haddock, Co-Directors for Conference 2012

Pre-Conference Weekend Institute

Saturday and Sunday, April 14 and 15, 2012 • 9:00 am to 5:30 pm

Registration: Friday Evening 6:30 – 8:30 (cash bar) • Saturday Morning 8:00 – 8:30

Welcome & Overview to Institute: Saturday Morning 8:30 – 8:45

#100-I Systems-Centered Foundation Training for Groups and Individuals

*Yvonne Agazarian, Ed.D., CGP, DFAGPA, FAPA
Steven Weinstein, MA, LMFT, LMHC, CGP*

In this two-day experiential practicum, members learn to use SCT functional subgrouping and reduce defenses in a specific sequence to develop the system's capacity for solving problems and applying common sense to everyday conflicts. Training in the Observer role is available for Intermediate and Advanced levels. (If you are interested in Observer training, make a note on your registration form).

#102-I Making a Map of Communication with SAVI: Tracking the Patterns That Matter

Claudia Byram, Ph.D., CGP

Sometimes the more we talk, the worse things get! Using the SAVI map (System for Analyzing Verbal Interactions), we will diagnose common communication binds and undo repetitive communication loops in the support of authentic, noise-free communication in organizations, therapy and everyday life. By "thinking" SAVI we can identify the behaviors that open or close our boundaries to new information. This is core training for Foundation and Intermediate members.

#103-I Contemplative Group Dynamics: Awakening Mind and Functional Subgrouping

Lawrence J. Ladden, Ph.D.

Through talks and contemplative instruction we will take a novel lens to functional subgrouping to see how the release from self-centered attention discloses the nature of experience or mind as transient and contextually determined. In this way we deepen our compassionate apprehension of the interdependence of self, other and lived-world.

#104-I Resonating with Low Energy - The Low Energy/Withdrawal Protocol in SCT

Merete Holm Brantbjerg, MPF

This workshop provides skill training that supports using the low energy protocol for yourself – and for Intermediate and Advanced participants using it with others. Key elements will be: Resonating with low energy, knowing how to support modification of low energy states, and normalizing these states as a strategy parallel to tension.

#301-IC Intermediate Skills Training

Dorothy Gibbons, LCSW

This training is an intensive skill training that is designed to shift focus from work with oneself to work with others. This training introduces the SCT protocols with an emphasis on the theoretical context within which each protocol is used, the actual steps in each technical skill that make up the protocol, video taped practice of each skill and review of each video taped section with an eye on building the skill of force field development.

By application to dorothygibbons2@yahoo.com.

Continues Mon.-Fri., 8:00-noon.

#401-IC Authority Issue Group

Susan P. Gantt, Ph.D., CGP, ABPP, FAGPA, FAPA

Rich Armington, LCSW

This training is an ongoing event that confronts the hatred of authority, one's own and others'. Alternating between training group practicum and review work, the program will focus on applying the Theory of Living Human Systems in exploring the issues of giving and taking authority.

Application and criteria at <http://bit.ly/vKMzkl>.

By application to armington@gmail.com.

Continues Mon.-Fri., 8:30-noon.

#402-I Observing a Foundation Group: Advanced Training in Creating an SCT Group

Susan Cassano, Ph.D., CGP

Jon McCormick, Ph.D., CGP

This training is a unique opportunity for SCT trainers or those interested in becoming trainers to observe Yvonne Agazarian, the founder and developer of SCT, as she leads a two-day weekend foundation group through the first phases of group development. The group will meet separately throughout the two days as a data-based task group to track group dynamics, phase of system development, and linking leader interventions to theory and methods.

By application to susancassano@sbcglobal.net and jm2022@columbia.edu.

#502-IC Advanced Training for Trainers

Ray Haddock, MBChB, M.MedSc., FRCPsych

David K. Schwing, LCSW

This training is for SCT trainers or those interested in becoming one for OD or therapy. This training observes the Authority Issue Group and then meets to track group dynamics, phase of system development, communication patterns that support the phase and leadership interventions to member, subgroup and group-as-a-whole, while linking interventions to theory and group functioning.

By application to dave.schwinglcsw@gmail.com.

Continues Mon.-Fri., 8:30-noon.
